INTRODUCTION

Throughout late August and September 2022 violence between Hindu and Muslim communities overwhelmed Leicester, UK. The activities included mass mobilizations, vandalism, and physical attacks against both Muslims and Hindus. According to the 2011 census, Leicester is 13% Muslim, 12.3% Hindu, 22.3% are of Indian-origin and 1.9% are of Pakistani-origin. As of 2017, in the UK overall, the Muslim population is 5% and Hindu population is 1.5%. Leicester is also home to the Daman Hindu community; an Indian, Hindu, diasporic community originating in Daman and Diu (India) but resettled in Portugal and then Leicester, subsequently. Though geopolitical conflict in the Indian subcontinent has generally contributed to growing unrest between British Muslim and Hindu communities, recent unrest between the two escalated following a cricket match on August 28 between India and Pakistan, where fans clashed violently. Conflicts between Indian and Pakistani fans have occurred previously, but current events suggest an unprecedented escalation. The police acknowledged the vast nature of the unrest.

Both the Indian and Pakistani embassies have issued statements about the violence, warning of harm to their respective diasporic communities. This pertains to a broader trend of tension between the two countries emanating from inter-diasporic clashes. In the case of August and September 2022, clashes took place not only on the ground in Leicester, but also in the social-cyber domain, where polarizing elements shared hostile rhetoric, memes, and videos, with numerous documented calls to violence.

While numerous articles and investigations have sought to characterize the role of social cyber activity and determine how such activity may have inflamed tensions between the two communities, a number of questions persist around how these forces interacted. From malicious narratives, to bot activity, to the role of cyberswarming, to Islamophobic and Hinduphobic tropes, how did these online activities spill over into real world violence, vandalism, mob mobilization, and intimidation?

In order to assess the various facets of this question, the NCRI collected data for the time period between August 27 (one day prior to the India vs Pakistan cricket match, where India won) and September 19, from Twitter, YouTube, TikTok, and Instagram concerning the incidents in Leicester. We performed Open Source Intelligence Collection (OSINT), time series analysis, natural language processing, network analysis, and sentiment analysis to identify key events, information operations, malicious narratives, and influence networks. These methods allow us to provide a coherent and data-driven description connecting online and real world activities.

BLUF

- Malicious online narratives, many since deleted, played an essential role in instigating attacks in Leicester.
- False reports of child kidnapping, false reports of attacks on a local mosque, conspiracies of global dominance, and ethnic hatred were all prevalent narratives during the unrest.
- Majid Freeman, a key influencer who has openly voiced support for Al Qaeda, slain ISIS fighters played a key role amplifying false information that appear to have instigated unrest.
- On Twitter, linguistic analysis shows that mentions of “Hindu” exceeded mentions of “Muslim” by nearly 40% and that Hindus were largely depicted as aggressors and conspirators in a global project for international dominance.
- Mentions of “Muslim” were depicted as retaliating and responding to this aggression, though most evidence indicates that the violence was directed largely towards Hindus.
- Among the most retweeted content that leveled identity attacks, NCRI found blame for the events was placed on Muslims by a concentrated but highly retweeted network coming from India.
- Inauthentic coordinated activity has been disseminating both Hinduphobic and Islamophobic messaging.

2. In 2017, Indian Cricket fan, Hemant Barat with a visible Indian flag on his vehicle, had been pushed from his motorbike by a group of Pakistani cricket fans on Melton Road.
3. On September 19, 2022, the Indian High Comission in the UK released a statement condemning the violence against the Indian community and the vandalization of Hindu sacred symbols. On the same day, The High Commission of Pakistan to the UK released a statement, expressing concern for the violence unleashed and Islamophobic incidences in Leicester.
• AI Models to detect incitement to violence reported that 70% calls were made on Twitter against Hindus, and 30% against Muslims during events in Leicester.

• The NCRI assesses that patterns of reciprocal escalation are likely to continue to heighten unless platforms can better detect and prevent the abuse of their products to harm vulnerable populations.

TIMELINE OF EVENTS AND MALICIOUS NARRATIVES

NCRI developed a timeline of key events and described notable and highly engaged tweets, events, and malicious narratives that occurred over the course of the violence. On August 28, 2022, Indian cricket fans gathered in the Belgrave area of Leicester to celebrate India’s win over Pakistan in the Asia Cup series. On August 29, a Twitter user with username @tragicbud with user description including “fuck them pajeets” tweeted one of the earliest malicious narratives with high engagement, including a short video. Since deleted, the narrative tied violence — which sometimes accompanies cricket matches — to nefarious “Nazi” and “Hindutva” nationalist objectives. The conspiracy that “Nazi-like Hindutva” organizations and ideology, as opposed to ethnic, or nationalistic, rivalry at a cricket match, was a force behind the events in Leicester would come to be the most widely subscribed to, misleading, and malicious narrative over the course of the following days. Sources state that tensions between the two communities have existed for years, and the flashpoint erupted during the cricket match.

The video shows cricket fans carrying an Indian flag shouting “Pakistan Murdabad” (which translates to “Death to Pakistan” in Hindi), accompanied by brawls between Indian and Pakistani cricket fans. It is notable that such chants are common from fans of both teams, during and after games in the historic cricketing rivalry between India and Pakistan. The same video captured footage of a man, his T-shirt torn off, assaulted by Indian cricket fans during an altercation. Other videos from the night show a man, reportedly Sikh, being assaulted by Indian cricket fans after he allegedly snatched their Indian flag. Police reported that they were investigating the incident. This tweet, the first one regarding the violence to go viral, received 2,037 retweets and quote tweets, and the video accumulated close to 305,000 views.

NCRI produced a social graph of the tweet, depicting users who replied to the tweet as well as any further reply branches to better understand the tweet’s reach.

Though calls of death to India and Pakistan are common in cricket matches, the interpretation above is lacking evidence. The narrative above constrains and distorts by interpreting these chants to only pertain to ethnic hatred and nationalism. Indeed, the graph shows that not-for-profits which address Islamophobic incidents appear in the reply network to the tweet. For example, the Islamophobia Response Unit’s Twitter handle asked for the incident to be submitted on the “Report an Incident” form on its website, while Tell MAMA UK announced it was investigating the chants on its platform (Appendix A). These responses — among the first and emerging from influential organizations of repute — suggest a prima facie assumption that Islamophobia was the catalyst for these fistfights. Other users replied with calls for sending Indian fans back to India and canceling their visas (Appendix A).

A previous NCRI report has determined this is a derogatory slur for Indians and Hindus, in particular. See Sudhakar, et al. “Anti-Hindu Disinformation: A Case Study of Hinduphobia on Social Media.” NCRI. 11 July 2022.
A quote tweet by Majid Freeman (20.8k+ followers at the time) on August 29 gave a significant lift to the narrative that the attacks were motivated by “Hindu Nationalism” and hatred of Islam. Freeman claimed the chants were religiously motivated (“We all know they were really chanting against Muslims”) and insinuates that the same “Hindutva cowards” were the ones who ripped up a Quran near the same area previously (Figure 3). These claims by Freeman remain uncorroborated.
Cyber Social Swarming Precedes Real World Riots in Leicester: How Social Media Became a Weapon for Violence

Majid Freeman is a British Muslim former aid worker who has voiced support for convicted murderer and Al Qaeda supporter Aafia Siddiqui, posted messages in support of ISIS, and offered prayers for slain British Al Qaeda operative Iftekar Jaman — all on his personal social media pages.

Freeman’s tweets were amplified on Twitter. In their immediate aftermath, British Pakistani networks used cyber swarming — tactically alarm or recruit followers to simultaneously deploy en masse in both cyber, and, potentially, real-world domains — to call for a response (see figure 6). Below are tweets exemplifying these calls, which have since been deleted. These tweets consistently ranked in the most engaged tweets (based on retweets) between August 30 - September 4.

The NCRI chronologically constructed a sequence of online and real-world events that built up tensions beforehand and called for violence. This timeline provides a suggestive causal link between online activity and communal violence, shedding light on the texture of Leicester’s violence. All intelligence gathered was through open source means. A detailed timeline can be found in Appendix B.

NCRI was collecting on many accounts using the internet archive to find deleted material in other cases.
As is evident from Figure 5 above, several malicious narratives circulated publicly with calls to respond to Hindus as an emerging threat. In order to understand the nature of the narratives that sparked the violence, the NCRI constructed a taxonomy of malicious narratives, which include the date of the incident, a succinct statement of the narrative, origins of the narrative, the threats of violence associated with it, evidence of cyber swarming, influencers responsible for amplification, and authenticity verification. We encourage the reader to review the complete taxonomy along with corroborating additional details and evidence in Appendix C. In the following section, we summarize and illustrate some of the key components of this taxonomy.
A SUMMARY OF MALICIOUS NARRATIVES

Misinformation characterized a vulnerable, diasporic community — British Hindus — as an aggressive, hypernationalist, and fascist threat. Other narratives depicted Leicester Hindus as heretically evil and filthy, playing on age-old Hinduphobic tropes. Online narratives depicted Hindus kidnapping innocent Muslims girls, attacking Muslims at random, as akin to Nazis, and as responsible for unprovoked mosque vandalism. These conspiracies were whipped up as a pretext to inflict violence against a vulnerable community (Appendix C).

One particular example is the September 12 rumor (subsequently proven false) that three Hindu men, motivated by Islamophobia, had attempted to kidnap a Muslim schoolgirl. This rumor was amplified in particular by Instagram account Dutch Raja (@1100786x), who has over 150,000 followers. Dutch Raja re-posted a social media message purportedly by the kidnapped girl’s father that showed a Hindu man standing in front of a BMW with visible license plate, as the alleged kidnapper. The post exhorted users to “stand up to the vulnerable” against “these [cunts] bringing RSS far extremist ideology to UK … terrorizing our Muslim and Sikh women, children and elderly. We need to stand up for the vulnerable.”

The following day, Leicester police reported, “We have established that the incident did not take place and no offence was committed.” The police took cognizance of social media misinformation and noted that posts like Dutch Raja’s “encouraged others to act,” drawing a link between online disinformation and real-world activity. This link is further cemented by Dutch Raja’s September 14 Instagram story which exhorts a meet-up to travel to Leicester at 3 pm on September 17 to “show these RSS Hindutva extremists not to mess with our Muslim and Sikh — women, children, and elderly.” That story includes images of Hindu teenagers as alleged extremists. The use of identical language in Dutch Raja’s earlier post suggests the latter was also in response to the supposed attempted kidnapping — at this point verified by police to have been false. On September 17, violent clashes between Hindu and Muslim communities broke out in the midst of an “unauthorized protest march” on Green Lane Road. Online activity during the time period showed Hindu and Indian accounts responding with hashtag #HindusUnderAttackinUK, which trended on Twitter with close to 200k retweets.

This playbook was similarly used on the same day (September 17), as illustrated in Figure 7, when several influencers claimed Hindus had attacked a mosque; the Leicester police clarified that no such attack occurred. Nevertheless, the so-called attack was used to call for "put[t]ing] an end to Hindu dogs." (Figure 7) The following day, a specific rumor emerged that the Shree Sanatan Hindu Mandir on Ealing Road had commissioned Angel Tours buses to send "Hindutva thugs" to attack the Leicester mosque. A call to demonstrate the following weekend outside that temple — "the hornets nest of Nazi Hindutva" — surfaced on social media. The owner of Angel Tours dismissed the rumors. It should be noted that this misinformation was extremely penetrative, and was amplified by Al Jazeera and Indian outlet The Wire.

(a) Accounts — notably, Al Jazeera — spread misinformation about Leicester mosque attack, verified as false by police.

(b) A Hindu mandir is accused of being a den of Hindutva, bussing members to attack Muslims in Leicester.

Moreover, misinformation also targeted the British Muslim community, with several threads of anti-Muslim misinformation uncovered by the NCRI. The most viral of these was a rumor that Muslims had burned a Hindu temple (Appendix C(k)) in Birmingham during the Hindu festival of Navratri, on both September 19 and October 4. While a building in Birmingham was indeed burnt on the date in question, it was a supermarket which had caught ablaze accidentally when a rubbish-fire spread. This was explicitly clarified by the Midlands Fire department, in response to user @ssingapuri, who appears to have originated the misinformation. @ssingapuri’s tweet was removed by Twitter (see Figure 8 below). Nevertheless, users continued sharing this incendiary accusation, and often accompanied it with "England police ineffective in saving Hindus," both underlining Hindus’ state as victims and outlaying a potential justification for reciprocal violence as means of self-defense.
As is alluded to by the descriptions above and as our quantitative analysis will demonstrate, anti-Muslim and anti-Hindu disinformation narratives are distinguished in two important ways. First, anti-Muslim disinformation centered primarily on blame attribution, whereas anti-Hindu disinformation was highly specific, identifying particular actors, alleged crimes, and mobilizing targeted action around them. Second, and perhaps more importantly, anti-Muslim disinformation — on events in Leicester, UK — was spread almost exclusively through and within a concentrated, dense network of users in India. This suggests the distortion of diasporic events through a domestic political lens. On the other hand, anti-Hindu disinformation spread through a more diffuse Islamist network, penetrating a more diverse set of audiences, including several media outlets.

ONLINE NARRATIVES MISCHARACTERIZED HINDUS AS INSTIGATORS, MUSLIMS AS RESPONDING TO AGGRESSION

Data Collection

Using Pushshift’s Twitter API, specific search terms (Appendix D) were used to find tweets with chatter about the religious tensions in Leicester, as well as tweets containing anti-Hindu and anti-Muslim rhetoric. Given that we are predominantly interested in online rhetoric prior to and during the violence, our dataset ranges between August 27 and September 19, 2022.

Time Series Data

We began by conducting time series analyses on terms pertaining to both the Hindu and Muslim communities from August 27 through September 19 on Twitter, a period during which the sharpest escalation in mobilizations and conflict-related incidents took place. Our analysis shows strong reactivity on the platform, with sharp increases in mentions of "Muslim," "Hindu," "Islamist," and "Hindutva." We noted that mentions of Hindus outstripped mentions of Muslims by nearly 40% during peak online activity around the conflict, suggesting an asymmetry of attention between the two communities online.

We next sought to portray how each community was characterized during the conflict on Twitter to capture whether and to what extent Twitter users differentially regarded Muslims and Hindus as victims or aggressors respectively, in the conflict. To do so, we used Natural Language Processing (NLP) including Word2Vec\textsuperscript{9} and developed graph analyses, or topic networks,\textsuperscript{10} which demonstrate the prominent terms associated with the two religious groups.

We began by cleaning, parsing and tokenizing the entire corpus from our timeline and used seed word "Muslim" to analyze semantic themes frequently associated with Muslim.

In figure 9a, the topic network appears to show that while Muslims are associated with themes of protest, confrontation, and outrage, the data does not support the notion that the Twitter postings and data depicts Muslims with ideological or religious hatred. Rather, descriptors like “drunken,” “retaliation,” “revenge,” and “protester” appear as the terms most related to motivation in the network. In addition, hedging terms that serve to sanitize and soften claims (i.e., “allegedly,” “seemingly,” and “supposedly”) are seen throughout the network. The popular narrative of the motivations behind the attacks in Leicester appears to be that organic outrage — fueled by alcohol and provoked by violence at a sporting event — led to mob violence. While this may be partially accurate, NCRI’s findings also suggest that many attacks appear to be motivated by dominance conspiracies and disinformation narratives disseminated by British-Pakistani networks.

We next repeated the same process for the term “Hindu.”

Unlike the topic network for “Muslim,” the network for “Hindu” appears to depict terror, threat, and dominance as key themes pertaining to the term “Hindu.” Terms such as “abuse,” “rampage,” “terrorise/terrorize,” and “unleash” cluster closely with Hindu. In addition, unlike the Muslim topic network, ethnic slurs such as Mushrik (idol worshipper) appear in the margins, near accusations of “genocide.” These tropes of both religious enmity and genocidal intent are instances of Hinduphobia. These accusations and slurs appeared in the real world as well as the Cyber social domain, during the first stages of violence (Appendix B). Taken together, these findings suggest that dominance and conspiracy narratives circulated by British-Pakistani networks mainstreamed as primary depictions of Hindus overall on Twitter. NCRI assesses that these narratives were deployed as a pretext to violence.

A TOPOGRAPHY OF MUSLIM AND HINDU TWITTER-SPHERES

To further understand the list of actors discussing this topic, a twarc network was used to analyze interactions between key authors discussing the violence. This allows us to map the connections between various social media users both within the Hindu and Muslim Twitterspheres, enabling us to detect the nature of salient social media communication. We identify the most prominent (edges >= 500) social media accounts disseminating information about the Leicester violence within each community. Were these users primarily interacting within and mobilizing their own communities, appealing to authorities, or exacerbating cross-community tension through crossover interaction?

Our graph depicts the Hindu Twittersphere users as nodes, largely in pink with prominent authors being @SarahLGates, @InsightUK, and @RanbirS11414092. We note that the Leicester police (@leicspolice) is the central node within the network of prominent Hindu users, suggesting that Hindu users engaged the most with the police among all social media accounts. Meanwhile, Muslim networks (green) revolve mostly around Majid Freeman and 5PillarsUK.

Note that the drunken cluster appears in the topic network as well, but clusters more closely with "muslim." In fact, tweet analysis shows that the term was overwhelmingly used to describe Muslims, and not Hindus in fact.
A SHARP RISE IN ANTI-HINDU SLURS

NCRI found Hinduphobic slurs rising along with real world activity in the cyber social domain. One such slur is the reference to practicing Hindus as “cow piss drinkers,” which had previously been used in anti-Hindu propaganda. Mentions of “cow piss” (Appendix E) more than doubled on Twitter as Islamist mobs surrounded the Durga temple in Birmingham on September 20.

The same rhetoric was used on the day of the attack, as captured in the video screenshot in Figure 11 above, wherein an Islamist shouts “piss drinking bastards,” “go drink some cow piss,” and “go eat cow shit” at the Hindus within the temple vicinity. Though trends were much more marginal, we also found a small rise in Islamophobic retorts of “camel-piss-drinker” as well (Appendix O).

MUSLIM BLAME FOR VIOLENCE AMPLIFIED BY CONCENTRATED INDIAN RETWEET NETWORKS

Using Google Jigsaw’s Perspective API, we retrieved sentiment scores for our entire dataset for Toxicity, Insult, Identity Attack (blame), and Threat. The scores range between 0 and 1, where a tweet was classified as a sentiment if scores were greater than 0.5.

Based on this data, we conducted time series analyses for the sentiments expressed in the tweets over time. We found that throughout the violence, tweets based on “identity attacks,” which measures blame leveled at specific identities, sharply increased over time.

Given that throughout the violence, tweets that lay blame to a specific identity (i.e., identity attacks) were the most prominent, we manually classified the top 500 most engaged tweets with an identity attack score greater than 0.5. We classified which religious group it portrayed as the “aggressor” and which one as the “victim” of the violence. This was then separated by location.

This manual classification finds that tweets originating from the U.K. depict both Hindus and Muslims as aggressors of the violence, with slightly more blame cast on Hindus. However, tweets originating from India disproportionately project blame on Muslims. It is to be noted that this analysis is based on the top 500 retweeted tweets, so countries without a large sample size (i.e., Pakistan) were not detected.

The data suggests a sphere of reactivity and amplification of blame was disseminated by a network of self-identified Indian accounts. On one hand, data from our topic network suggests that the overall tone on Twitter portrayed Hindus as aggressors. However, this data suggests a highly orchestrated echo chamber from India was amplifying tweets solely blaming Muslims for the events in Leicester. This adds an important, concerning element to our findings. Namely, it suggests that events in diasporic communities are feeding into ethnic reactivity and fueling hyper sensational nationalism (See Figure 17). Other groups have found evidence that bot-like, coordinated inauthentic activity from India, may be responsible for artificially amplifying this blame.

This same process of classification was repeated for both YouTube and Tiktok Data (in the english language), where we ranked the most viewed videos prior to September 18 (outbreak of violence) in descending order and then classified which community was portrayed as the aggressor and which as the victim. From the 24 most viral (views > 20,000) TikTok videos, 17 of those portray Hindus as the aggressor, 3 of those Muslims as the aggressors and the remaining 4 do not specify (Appendix F). Similarly, for YouTube, out of the 14 most viral (views > 10,000) videos prior to the violence, 5 portray Hindus as the aggressors, 4 Muslims as aggressors, and the remaining 5 do not assign blame (Appendix G).

Using YouTube's API, we found 14 videos with a total of 1,180,042 comments cumulatively. These videos all had over 10,000 views and were uploaded on or before September 18. From the comments, we performed topic modeling using TF-IDF and Non-Negative Matrix Factorization (NMF). The tokens with the highest weightage are then defined as the “topics,” and each topic is then analyzed in relation to the rest of the tokens. Finally, these topics were transformed into word clouds; our analysis found evidence of inflammatory anti-Hindu comments (Appendix H) detected within the topics.

16These topic models by means suggest that there was no Islamophobia - indeed, we found examples of it. Yet the prominent tropes found were to be Hinduphobic in nature.
OVERALL RISE IN ISLAMOPHOBIA AND HINDUPHOBIA ONLINE

Inauthentic Bot-Like Activity Disseminated both Hinduphobic and Islamophobic Messaging

Using NCRI’s tools, we found evidence of bot-like accounts that disseminated both anti-Hindu and anti-Muslim messaging throughout the violence, projecting the other community as responsible for the violence. We determined which accounts were bot-like based on the account creation dates (if the date the account was created during the violence, the account was further investigated) and the nature of account messaging (large volumes of identical messaging indicates that the account is likely a bot).

We found that anti-Muslim bot-like accounts focused on socio-economic indicators to differentiate Hindus and Muslims. For example, bots emphasized the rates of incarceration of British Hindus and Muslims. The bots seek to project Hindus as a model minority in contrast to Muslims, whom they characterize as violent and having antagonized other communities. In addition, by implication, the tweets suggest that Muslims are part of a global Al Qaeda and ISIS conspiracy, generalizing the entire Muslim community as bloodthirsty and criminal. These caricatures en masse, are derogatory and Islamophobic in nature. These tropes reinforce ancient ethnic hatreds and undermine inter-community trust.

The bot-like account depicted in Figure 12 on the right has been suspended from Twitter, while that depicted on the left (@topaboygirl) has no profile picture and was created in August 2022.

A hallmark of anti-Hindu bot like accounts activity was the creation of a binary between “Hindus” and “Hindutva extremists,” where the latter is alleged to have inflicted violence on the Leicester community. Identified bots also emphasize that the Hindu and Muslim communities had lived peacefully before the arrival of “extremist Hindus.” The tweets also allege that the Hindus involved in the Leicester violence have extremist political views, described as Nazist.

The first bot, @luxylife99, was categorized as such to its username, its account creation date (September 2022 - during Leicester violence), its display picture (DP), and its repetitive messaging. The second bot-like account @YP76483037t also has a dubious username, DP, and was also created in September 2022. It was also rated highly (4.2 out of 5) as a bot like account using the Botometer tool created by the Observatory on Social Media (OSoMe) and the Network Science Institute (IUNI) at Indiana University.17

HINDUPHOBIC AND ISLAMOPHIC TROPES IN ONLINE ACTIVITY

OSINT reveals that both anti-Hindu and anti-Muslim memes, caricatures, and messaging has been on the rise. Anti-Muslim caricatures actively dehumanize Muslims and fearmonger about the potential for an Islamic invasion, while anti-Hindu memes suggest Hindus were “deserving” of the violence inflicted on them based on their inherently “fascist” traits.

| !Image | While this does not appear to be associated with the Leicester violence, this meme was circulated with hashtag (among many others) #HindusUnderAttackInUK

This dehumanizing meme characterizes the Muslim community as “insects.” Each insect in this cartoon corresponds to an alleged threat associated with Islam, “combining together to destroy India” (Translations in Appendix K).

The image fearmongers that the UK will soon come under Islamic rule.

Hinduphobic Messaging

This meme was found circulating with #MuslimsUnderAttackInUK and #Islamophobia which refers to the idea that Hindus commit violence against Muslims and thereby trigger Muslim retaliation. The Hindus then are able to portray this retaliation as violence against them to garner sympathy from the media and play "victim" in the situation.

The cartoon itself shows a Hindu man (represented by Hindu symbol "Om") beating a beehive (representing Muslims) and then whining in front of the media that the bees are attacking him.

This meme portrays the media looking the other way when Hindus persecute Muslims but becoming active when Muslims act in self-defense to combat the supposed Hindu aggression. It claims that the media is biased against Muslims.

This tweet calls for the unity of Muslims and incitement of fear among non-Muslims, addressing the provocation of Muslims by “kuffars” (infidels) who then subsequently play victim.

It also refers to Hindus as “pajeets,” which as aforementioned, is an anti-Hindu slur.
We then analyzed whether the hatred faced by these respective communities garnered equal or differential attention on social media. Disparities in recognition of these hatreds naturally have the potential to skew how the public views the events in Leicester. As shown in Figure 16 below, we see that mentions of Islamophobia consistently outpace those of Hinduphobia, suggesting an education gap between the respective hatreds.

Hate Speech Detection Models suggest that 70% of Violence Incited on Twitter was against Hindus, 30% against Muslims

Finally, we deployed sophisticated hate speech detection AI models to quantify incitement to violence online. We detected the direct “calls for action” to incitement of violence that were made during the course of these events. Using machine learning models, HateBERT\(^8\) and ConfliBERT\(^9\) researchers constructed a data set of 805 candidate hate speech posts. We then used a human-in-the-loop approach, whereby analysts manually verified whether the AI-identified candidate posts, in fact, put forth an imminent call to violence.

HateBERT has been trained for abusive language detection, while ConfliBERT understands language that covers political conflicts. For better coverage, we also trained these models on some public incitement to violence-related corpuses scraped from GAB, Twitter, and Reddit. We passed all the samples to both these models, and combined together their predictions to get a final list of candidates.

HateBERT flagged almost 450 posts as inciteful, while ConfliBERT marked almost 540. From the combined sample of 805 posts, after removing duplicates, 76 posts were found to be clearly inciteful by the manual annotators (Appendix L). Out of these, 53 posts were calling for violent action against Hindus, while 23 were inciting violence against Muslims. Thus, as shown in Figure 17, approximately 70% of all calls for violent action were made against Hindus during the course of events.

There are some limitations to these data in that they are certain to underestimate the true number of violent threats against both communities and thus represent a floor, rather than a ceiling for actual threats during this period. However, these tools have been used successfully in the past and we assess it likely that the ratio of threats the data describes is unlikely to be systematically biased, and thus these percentages are likely to be representative of the broader proportion of threats in this corpus.

For qualitative analysis and inspection, we tabulate a few examples for reference (Appendix M) as well as note key themes present in the calls for violence through word clouds (Appendix N).

CONCLUSION

Our findings suggest that the sustained violence in Leicester did not persist through organic outrage. The key feature of how this violence organized and erupted appears to lie in the use of social media platforms as weapons to propagate malicious narratives. Our analysis showed that disinformation about Hindus as bloodthirsty and genocidal, as well as religious enmity, motivated where and when attacks took place through the recruitment of online reinforcements to real world engagements.

Mainstream media platforms including the BBC, The Guardian, The New York Times, and other outlets failed to perform due diligence on Majid Freeman and amplified the voice of a conspiracy theorist and extremist sympathizer, who was a central agitator in the events of Leicester. NCRI analysis reveals that Freeman was a key disseminator of malicious narratives that were in turn disseminated by a network of groups known to be involved in mobilizing on the ground in Leicester itself.

As the events in Leicester took shape, NCRI analysis also found coordinated activity coming from self-identified Indian accounts amplifying blame, ethnic distrust, and accusations against the Muslim community and Islam as a tradition. These findings suggest that amplification networks in India are feeding the fire of populist, xenophobic, and sensationalist tropes to opportunistically stoke defensiveness and hypernationalism in the face of attacks against diasporic communities. These activities distort real threats that can and should be addressed soberly through inter-community dialogue, and replace them with calls for escalation in a global ethnic conflict. Paradoxically, the conspiratorial attacks in Leicester, which claimed to be in response to extremist forms of “Hindutva,” have only served to elevate actors that conform to these very stereotypes.

In its totality, our findings portray a worrying system of organized violence that allows for runaway escalation outside the reach of law enforcement officials, lawmakers, and mainstream media. Violence engendered through social media platforms is regularly reaching episodic spillovers of inter-group conflict that now threaten vulnerable communities throughout the world.

Local community leaders and law enforcement may have the opportunity to overturn the erosion of public trust impacting local communities and develop unions to address these issues. Using this report as a preventative means for the purpose of facilitating dialogues among religious groups, community members, government agencies, and law enforcement can strengthen community relations. Reporting in conjunction with community leadership may assist with further identifying collaborative solutions to address sectarian violence, hate crime prevention and conflict resolution before online reactivity transforms into real world violence. Reacting collaboratively to false narratives, allegations, rumors, or biases propagated by social media may prevent the next outbreak of sectarian violence and or conflict instigated by outside agitators.
RECOMMENDATIONS

- Memory hole problem: because malicious actors are deleting incendiary narratives and calls for violence after the impact of those calls are executed, social media platforms must do a better job of recording and sharing deleted activity with researchers. Not doing so abets perpetrators in hiding potentially criminal activity.

- Government authorities made impressive strides in communicating in near real-time with the communities in question. Platforms and cyber-social research organizations need to develop closer-to-real-time means of detecting cyberswarming to help provide early warning to vulnerable communities and communicate threats to local community leaders and Law Enforcement officials so they can act collaboratively to address false narratives that can lead to real-world violence.

- Build on interfaith dialogue between communities — there are successful examples of such facilitated dialogue entities that create and facilitate these types of interactions. These exist both in the U.K and the U.S.A that may involve government or other supportive organizations.

- Given that Britain’s current Prime Minister, Rishi Sunak, is a practicing Hindu of Indian origin, understanding and monitoring the networks and online influence involved in the violence of Leicester is urgently needed. NCRI assesses that conspiracies about “Hindutva” dominance are likely to increase dramatically in the coming months and this violence is highly replicable.

Appendix B - Timeline of Events

There were claims that other cricket fans heard “death to Muslims” chants. On August 31, in a series of leaked emails, Leicester Chief Inspector Paul Allen had written a letter to the Leicester Council of Faiths claiming that they believed some of the men in the video had chanted “death to Muslims” in Hindi. The next day, he clarified that there was no verifiable evidence that such chants calling for violence against Muslims had been made.

Video clips of the physical fights between Indian and Pakistani cricket fans circulated on social media platforms, amplified by several key influencers - Majid Freeman, Ian Miles Cheong, Sunny Hundal, Patt McGinness (National Housing Party UK, in a now deleted tweet) and several other British Conservative Twitter accounts.

5Pillars UK (Muslim News site in Europe, Australia and Americas) immediately claimed Muslims residents were being attacked.

Based on engagement (retweets and quote tweets) rankings on a day by day basis since the initial video until the first reported violent incidents, some of the most prominent tweets instigating violence against Indians and Hindus have since been deleted or accounts suspended.

On September 3, British comedian Guz Khan (Twitter name: Guztavo Khanage, who has a verified account) with over 100,000 followers called on "mandem" (British slang for "gang") to "sort out" the "Modi weirdos" (Figure 4).

The account Halifax Pakistanis has been suspended by Twitter. This account is known for deeply Anti-Hindu views. Below are sample tweets from the account:

Between September 4 - 6, Anti-Hindu attacks began taking place. On September 4 when Pakistan won another cricket match against India in the same Asia Cup series. INSIGHT UK, a British Hindu and Indian organization, reported the following with video footage: "4th Sep: When Pakistan won the cricket match, riots started. Amongst many incidents a Hindu home celebrating #GaneshChaturthi was attacked. Eggs were thrown into the house, attempted knifing of a young Hindu male and his aunt was punched on the nose when she came to save him." These claims are currently unverified by police, and the video posted does not corroborate the claims.

On September 5, reports stated mobs of British Pakistani men targeted Hindu neighborhoods and homes, attacked Hindu homes with weapons, removed sacred flags from houses and vandalized property near a Hindu temple. There were reportedly chants of "Modi Kutta Hindustan Murdabad" (Hindi for "Modi Dog, Death to India") and verbal references to Hindus as "mushrik" (Arabic Anti-Hindu slur for "idol worshiper"). Video footage of the incident was amplified by conservative British Twitter influencers (@paulbowen). Following the violence, Leicester police officers patrolled the streets with orders to intercept any person causing disturbances.

It appears that Twitter user Halifax Pakistanis @HPakistanis was present at the violence. Along with the tweet aforementioned (which was one of the most engaged tweets on September 5, another tweet from Halifax Pakistanis makes the list). This tweet is currently unavailable due to the account being suspended.
On the same day, additional claims about Hindus attacking Muslims were made by Majid Freeman and Twitter user @xavierjp__, who called for additional violence against Hindus. However, both claims have not been verified.

On September 7, Riaz Khan, author of Khan Memoirs of an Asian Casual, (Facebook - 25k+ followers) shared a Facebook post which claimed that the cricket match wasn’t responsible for the current tension between the Hindu and Muslim communities. He claimed that for the past 3 months, “Hindutva RSS thugs” had harassed the Muslims, referencing a brutal attack with baseball bats on a young boy and another attack on a 19 year old boy because he threw an egg, with no legal action taken. (Note: Khan was seen in Leicester during the violence on September 17)

On September 9, Smile 2 Jannah, a channel with 611,000 subscribers posted a video titled “Deluded Indian Fans in UK (4K)” whereby, starting at 1:46, he advises the Indians in the UK who support the BJP to “humble [them]selves” as “the Pakistani gangs over here (UK)...get a bit nuts...” and that the BJP “fans...are on some serious vegetarian diet...[so] it’s just gonna be a walkover”. At 2:50, he suggests that Hindutva followers who are stuck in their own “echo chamber” in India cannot spread their ideology in the UK without receiving pushback. He also says that he is also willing to fight with anyone who supports the BJP. This video received more than 128,000 views and 3,800 comments.

On September 10, an Islamist used foul language to deride a group of Hindu girls who were dancing for Navratri (Hindu festival). As he takes the video, he says, “Think this is f India.” According to the voice in the video, the girls were dancing opposite a mosque. The location of the mosque is unknown.

On September 11, Majid Freeman tweeted that a group of Hindus in a car on Belgrave Road attacked a Muslim upon asking if he was a Muslim. Freeman claims that they attacked him with a knife but that he wasn’t stabbed. This incident was not confirmed by the police and Majid Freeman eventually deleted the tweet. This was captured by NCRI’s tools. This alleged attack was also posted on DOAM’s Facebook page (242.7k followers). Twitter user South Asian Journal (@sajournal1 - 8.6k followers) also disseminated this message, suggesting that the RSS was involved. The police confirmed that no such attack had occurred.
On September 12, misinformation regarding the kidnapping of a Muslim schoolgirl by three Hindu men was spread on social media, with screenshots captured by Sarah Gates. Images of a man in front of his car were shared with captions saying that he is an RSS man targeting Muslims, Sikhs, women, and children in Leicester. Calls were made to locate his address and bring him to justice. Screenshots of personal DMs claiming the kidnapping and claiming victory of the "pajeet" removing the license plates were circulated on Instagram stories. Instagram user and British Pakistani influencer Dutch Raja (Instagram @1100786x - 150k+ followers) posted the image of the man onto his Instagram story and added a poll, saying, "SHALL WE GO SATURDAY TEACH THESE GUYS A LESSON?" where 95% of users voted "Yes". Majid Freeman claimed that the police had confirmed the kidnapping incident and that he had met the family of the Muslim girl (deleted); this was later proved to be false by the police. On September 14, Majid confirmed the story was false.
Cyber Social Swarming Precedes Real World Riots in Leicester: How Social Media Became a Weapon for Violence

On September 14, Dutch Raja posted an Instagram story - reposted by several other British Pakistani influencers - instigating a meeting in Birmingham at 3 pm on Saturday the 17th to travel to Leicester. Logistical details were allegedly shared in a private group chat. Photos of Hindu men as well as children/teenagers, with captions claiming that they were linked to the BJP and RSS, were shared. These same calls were made by several other Instagram users - including @ukapnacentral and @one_unity786.
Co-founder of Salam Initiative Ali Dawah posted on Instagram (@alidawah - 200k+followers) on September 17 that "Hindutva terrorists, flipping scums" were provoking Muslims and that he was going to Leicester to cover the Muslim side. He also addresses Majid Freeman, saying if he’s watching, to get into contact with him. Kas Jameel, another former British aid worker, posted on Facebook stating "Brothers in and around Leicester, there's some radicals out on the streets, get down there and make sure the sisters are protected. Imagine the radicals trying this up north, the well known names in Leicester should not of stayed quiet on this matter when the radicals started coming out in numbers your now relying on others to clean up your mess" This Facebook post was reposted by @ukapnacentral_ (username now changed to desi_muslims1)

On September 17, violence between Hindu and Muslim communities broke out during an "unauthorized protest march" in Green Lane Road. Videos show hooded men marching on the street with the police trying to restrain a clash between them. The police stated that after being alerted by officers in the area of the protest, additional officers went to the scene in order to restrain the situation but failed to prevent lawlessness. During the night, 2 arrests were made (after the police made a search of a large number of the participants) of men suspected of attempts to commit violence.

Misinformation about mosques being attacked was circulated online - henceforth, Leicester police issued a statement on September 17 stating "We've seen reports on social media that a mosque is being attacked. Officers on the ground have confirmed this is not true. Please only share information on social media you know to be true."

Nonetheless, the debunked claim of a mosque attacked by Hindus continued to be shared on social media. During the violence, as per a screenshot captured by Sarah Gates, posted by Instagram account @unbiasedmedia2 (22k followers) reported that Hindus chanted "Jai Shree Ram" (JSR) while throwing bottles outside the mosque. This has since been deleted. These were amplified by prominent Instagram accounts, including @doamuslims with over 250,000 followers. Instagram user @ukapnacentral posted an Instagram story during the violence, requesting Muslims to go to Leicester to defend a masjid (mosque) that was being attacked by Hindus.

There were again reports of burning of a sacred Hindu flag and the attack of a Hindu boy by an Islamist mob. In addition, several videos circulated on TikTok (and YouTube Shorts) by Islamists on the nights of the violence. Collectively, these videos accumulated more than 1 million views.
A video shows a man climbing the Leicestershire Brahma Samaj Shivalaya temple, tearing down a saffron flag, and rejoining the mob. Throughout the clashes, 25 police officers were injured and a 21-year-old Islamist named Adam Yusuf was arrested for possessing a knife. He stated that his aggression was inspired by social media.

A procession of Hindus marched through Leicester, chanting "Jai Shri Ram", "Ganapati Bappa Morya" and "Vande Mataram". The same day, on Belgrave Road, large Hindu mobs began to throw glass bottles at Muslims and the police.

On Youtube, 5Pillars (30k+ subs) posted a video (20:08) which shows a Muslim activist Shakeel Afsar, who heads the Birmingham-based Kashmir Liberation Organization, declaring that "the barbaric BJP and their mindset" is spreading in the UK and that the Muslim people will start fighting back against the RSS and the BJP as there is only so much they can tolerate with no support from the police.

On September 18, a Tweet from Twitter user Dr. Samran Kalam, an influencer from Pakistan's Tehreek-e-Insaf party, shared a video which shows masked, hooded men marching and shouting "Jai Shri Ram", with the message that "Hindu terrorists" had plundered a mosque. The video shared, however, doesn't show evidence of an attack on a mosque. The police reported that 15 people were arrested.

UK YouTuber and influencer Mohammed Hijab was seen in Leicester the week of September 18. On September 19, he posted a photo on his Instagram account that shows him leading a group of Muslim men; the photo is captioned: “Muslim patrol in Leicester”. The same day, a video was posted on Twitter, in which Hijab says in the middle of a group of Muslims, "If they (Hindus) believe in reincarnation, what a humiliation of them to be reincarnated into some pathetic, weak, cowardly people like that...I’d rather be reincarnated as a grasshopper."

On September 20, the Durga Bhawan temple in Birmingham was surrounded by a mob of more than 200 Muslim men. A video of a masked man threatening BJP and RSS supporters (apparently, due to Sadhvi Ritambara’s scheduled talk) and Hindutva followers was circulated on Twitter. In the video, the man, who says he’s from Birmingham, addresses the "BJP and the RSS Hindutva supporters", saying they are not welcome in the UK and that he and his men will show up to any event they organize. Furthermore, he says that he and his men are currently outside a mandir (The Durga Bhawan Hindu Centre can be seen in the background) where it’s peaceful but if the Hindutva supporters show up there or anywhere else, they will be met by him and his gang. The camera also turns to show all the hooded men gathered. The mob began to chant “Allah hu Akbar” and throw fireworks and missiles at the police, and some clambered up the temple wall. An 18-year-old member of the mob was arrested for possessing a knife.

On September 21, Majid Freeman featured a video from Mozzam Begg, who was detained in Guantanamo Bay for three years for terror related charges.

On September 22, a video titled "A message to Hindus out there" was circulated on Twitter. The individual in the video, later identified as Muhammed Abdul Jabbar, threatens Hindus. The music in the background is the Salil al-Sawarim, a chant produced by ISIS. He has since been arrested by Coventry police for "intent to incite religious hatred”.

On September 23, Anjem Choudary, a British Islamist and U.S. designated terrorist, was also accused on inflaming tensions.

Again there are multiple narratives.

I will say this though: in recent years there's been 'extremism' unhealthy nationalism on BOTH sides.

There are Hindutva events in India with thousands attending & they chant kill Muslims, death to Muslims. The narrative has now come here.

No it didn't - this is misinformation from the media to try to whitewash this, this began with Hindutva extremist Hindus marching shouting "death to Muslims" in Leicester. Most of the Muslims in Leicester are Indian, not Pakistani so the cricket had absolutely no bearing!

Appendix C(f) - Muslim boy beaten by Hindu mobs

Source

Wake up to find out about ANOTHER attack that took place last night in Leicester. Similar location to where a mob of 20+ racist Hindus randomly attacked & hospitalised another Muslim lad a few months ago. Why wasn’t no action taken by Leicester PCC? Take action before it escalates.

Appendix C(g) - False Flag Conspiracy

Source

- [0:50] - RSS is causing the violence in Leicester.
- [2:47] - There is racism in Hindu culture. RSS was founded by upper caste Brahmins to rule over lower castes.
- [6:04] - Hindutva essentially calls for Muslims to either go to Pakistan or to go to Kabristan (graveyard - die).
- [10:20] - RSS bows to Hindu god Hanuman as, according to the Imam, Hanuman is “someone of war” and RSS wants to be like him.
- [10:55] - Bollywood aligns with RSS and makes movies like “Sooryavanshi” to inspire hate against Muslims.
- [11:30] - RSS youths came to Leicester with student visas and “were allowed to create discord”.
- [13:00] - Priti Patel is responsible for allowing RSS members to come into Britain with student visas.
- [16:16] - He says Hindus are dancing and partying outside the mosque.
- [18:00] - Wealthy British Hindus fund the RSS which is why they and Hindu temple leaders in Britain don’t condemn the RSS.
- [18:20] - “Jai Shri Ram” is now a war cry. He says ‘pundits’ promote this chant with the full knowledge that it is meant to provoke.
● [20:15] - The violence in Leicester didn’t start over a cricket game. He says it happened because of “Hindutva protocol” and that the violence actually started on May 22 when a Muslim boy was beaten up by “Hindutva thugs”.
● [23:15] - Muslims from many English cities came to help defend the Muslims in Leicester facing attack.
● [23:40] - The man who took down the flag of a Hindu temple was an isolated incident. He claims that it is also possible that the man might have been a RSS “mole” who did it to “make the Muslims look bad”.
● [25:00] - The Hindus who march on the streets call the police to make it look like they’re innocent.
● [25:50] - He says that in the Jamia Masjid Leicester, the Deobandi Muslims invited only other Deobandis and Hindus and no other sects of Muslims (Sufis, Shias, etc.). Here, he laments the Muslim disunity which made the Deobandis consider other Muslims as “mushriks” (slur for idolaters) and invite the real “mushriks” (Hindus).
● [29:40] - He claims that 200 Hindus could not have marched in Leicester without the aid of the police or intelligence agencies.

Appendix C(k) - Burning Building Caused by Islamic Extremists

The West Midlands Fire Service (Birmingham) tweeted that the building was a supermarket which caught fire accidentally after the fire of some rubbish that was burning spread to the supermarket. The West Midlands Police replied to @ssingapuri, stating that the information he put out was false. The police also stated that the brawl outside the building was due to an argument about car parking.

Appendix C(I) - Fake Protest Against “Muslim Hate Crime”

Note: The above 3 posts believe that this poster called for Muslims to protest so that any unrest caused by their gathering could be pinned to the entire community. Therefore, they warned Muslims not to fall for this fake call for protest which had not been organized by and Muslim organization.

Overall, some people confused the fake poster, whose earliest appearance seems to be on September 10, to be calling for Hindus to protest against the crimes committed by Muslims and therefore, used it to decry Islamophobia on part of the Hindus. Others confused it to be applying to Muslims, asking them to protest against crimes committed on Muslims.

Every Muslim around the world condemns and detests ISIS. You cannot be a Muslim if you support the fascist bigoted hate-mongering ideologies of ISIS.

Why cannot Hindus around the world condemn HINDUTVA the same way.

HINDUTVA is to Hindus what ISIS is to Muslims.

It was Islamists, armed with knives and weapons, picking on innocent Hindu households, escalating the simple typical ‘cricket spat’ into a full blown crisis in #Leicester.

Thanks for getting that right, @sunny_hundal

A few days later, Hindus started circulating videos on WhatsApp of gangs of men attacking property and people in majority-Hindu areas.

In this video, a man pulls off a religious flag from a Hindu home. Another has a knife.

Appendix K - Translations of Anti-Muslim Meme

- Middle - “Bharat” - represents India
- Northwest - "Waqf" - represents Waqf board which is referred to as the governing body for Muslims in India
- West - "Conversion" - represents religious conversion, in this case referring to forced conversion from Hinduism to Islam
- Southwest - "Population Explosion" - refers to the idea that Muslims have many children to increase their count
- Southeast - "Jihad" - defined as “stuggle” or “effort” in Arabic but in this context, it refers to the war against the “unbelievers”
- East - "Illegal Constructions" - in this context, refers to mosques over demolished temples
- Northeast - “Masjid Madarassas” - refers to Muslim holy places of worship and schools

Appendix L - Remaining Posts not tagged as violent incitement

1. The posts did not have a direct ‘call for action’ but were rather hateful. While hate speech is a cause of concern, it would be more so for content moderation than law and order which is affected by inciteful language.
2. A lot of these posts were tagging authorities which would be the case of aggressive complaint, but not incitement.
3. Many posts did suggest alternative non-violent actions, including “deportation”, “arrest”, “action by authorities”, etc.

Appendix N - Themes in Calls for Violence

We look for the key themes in these incitement to violence calls. What triggered the models to flag the content as incitement? How did this vary from the human expert annotation? Were there any distinctions in the incitement calls being made against the two groups? To answer these questions, we looked into the most frequent unique words in the incitement calls through WordCloud plots:

Words frequented in anti-Hindu violence calls

Words frequented in anti-Muslim violence calls
Cyber Social Swarming Precedes Real World Riots in Leicester: How Social Media Became a Weapon for Violence

The Network Contagion Research Institute (NCRI) is a neutral and independent third party whose mission it is to track, expose, and combat misinformation, deception, manipulation, and hate across social media channels.

Acting as a public benefit corporation, NCRI is a not-for-profit organization that seeks to explore safe ways to audit, reveal challenges, devise solutions, and create transparency in partnerships with social media platforms, public safety organizations, and government agencies.

Observations:
1. In anti-Hindu violence calls, many references were also being made to the “India”, which wasn’t the case in calls against Muslims.
2. Religion-specific slurs including references to the cow, piss in case of Hindus, and peacefuls, jihadis in case of Muslims were more frequent.
3. The anti-Muslim calls were focusing on themes like “Terrorists, militants, attackers” whereas the anti-Hindu calls were focusing on themes like “Fascists, Nazis, Thugs” - both trying to portray an extreme picture of the opposite side for moral disengagement.
4. Anti-Hindu calls were portraying themselves as aggressive protagonists - “deal, force, beat, teach” whereas anti-Muslim calls were trying to portray themselves as protective protagonists - “save, stop, enough, finish”
5. Both the sides seem to be using multiple terms to indicate the opposite side: Hindu, Hindutva, Muslim, Islamists.
